

9. What are the rules for public hearings?

The Boundaries Commission may hold a public hearing in any community they think is suitable. The Commission sets the rules for how to run public hearings.

The Commission must give public notice at least 30 days before the hearing. The public notice must be in the Nunavut Gazette and at least one local newspaper.

The notice must:

- Invite the public to participate;
- Give the date, time, and place of the hearing;
- Tell people how to make a written submission;
- Show the deadline for written submissions;
- Give contact information for the Boundaries Commission, including a toll free phone number; and
- Indicate that any person, including MLAs, may make a written or oral presentation.

10. What are the rules for the Boundaries Commission's report to the Legislative Assembly?

The Boundaries Commission's report is based on the information they receive. The report proposes and describes:

- The number of constituencies and their boundaries;
- The number of people in each constituency;
- The reasons for any new boundaries; and
- The name of each constituency and the reasons for any changes.

The Commission sends copies of its report to the Chief Electoral Officer, the Speaker and the Clerk of the Legislative Assembly. The Clerk sends a copy to each MLA. The public can get a copy of the report from the Clerk's office. The Speaker lays the report before the Legislative Assembly. The MLAs consider the report as soon as they can.
